Addendum Newspaper Notice for King's Island Flood Relief Scheme

Dear Sir/Madam,

I refer to Limerick City and County Council's application, under Section 226 of the Planning and Development Act (As amended), for approval of a proposed flood defence scheme at King's Island, Limerick. There was an error in the newspaper notice published in Limerick Leader and Irish Independent on 19th December 2019 with an incorrect date for submissions / observations to be received by An Bord Pleanála.

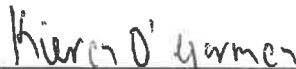

The Council has published an Addendum Notice in Limerick Leader and Irish Independent on Thursday 02nd January 2020 with the date as follows:-

'Any submissions / observations must be accompanied by a fee of €50 (except for certain prescribed bodies) and must be received by the Board not later than 5.30 p.m. on 14th February 2020.

I attach a copy of the Addendum Notice from the Limerick Leader and Irish Independent newspapers.

Should you require further information please do not hesitate to contact me.

Yours faithfully,

Joe Delaney

Dinosaurs 'shrank over millions of years, paving the way for birds to evolve as warm-blooded creatures'

Design & Delivery
2 JAN 2020

Nilima Marshall

DINOSAURS gradually "shrank" and paved the way for birds to evolve as warm-blooded creatures, new research claims.

Scientists believe that as dinosaurs decreased in size over millions of years they developed to have higher metabolism.

This evolutionary process allowed the creatures to burn energy from food at a faster rate and regulate their own body temperature.

The researchers, from the University of Chile, say their findings may also explain how mammals became warm-blooded, giving them the capability to generate heat by metabolic means.

Warm-blooded animals, or endotherms, need a lot of energy compared to cold-blooded creatures - such as reptiles and fish - that rely on environmental heat.

But the researchers say there are many benefits to being warm-blooded, which include being able to live in a wider geographic range as well as having greater mobility, brain power, stamina and tolerance to harsher conditions.

Over the years, scientists have struggled to understand the origins of endothermy, mainly due to the lack of fossil evidence.

To find out more about the evolution of warm-bloodedness, lead author Enrico Rezende and his team used a popular biologists' model for heat regulation known as the Scholander-Irving model.

According to this model, warm-blooded birds and mammals must balance their metabolic heat production with their heat loss to the environment in order to stay comfortable.

The team combined the Scholander-Irving model with different body sizes of theropods - a group of two-legged, three-toed dinosaurs from which all birds evolved.

Their findings suggest metabolic rates rose steadily throughout most of the Early to Middle Jurassic period, around 180 to 170 million years ago. Simulations indicate a warm-blooded creature would need to shrink nine-fold to attain the same energy requirements as a cold-blooded creature of the same original body size.

Evolution: Above, an artist's impression of theropods; below, Dr Holly Woodward analysing the bone tissue microstructures of T-rex fossils.

For instance, a 43kg modern-day bird would have the same energy requirements as its 370kg dinosaur ancestor.

The researchers conclude their smaller sizes and higher energy turnover rates ultimately favoured the theropod lineage, with simulations showing a 30-fold increase in population as endothermy evolved. Writing in the journal 'Science Advances', the authors noted: "Results suggest that a reduction in size constitutes the path of least resistance for endothermy to evolve."

Hospital overcrowding 'at its worst' as 118,000 on trolleys

Ian Begley

HOSPITAL overcrowding is the worst it has ever been, as more than 418,000 patients went without a bed in 2019.

The Irish Nurses & Midwives Organisation's (INMO) end-of-year analysis has revealed the 118,367 people waiting on trolleys last year is 9pc higher than it was in 2018.

More than 1,300 of the patients were children younger than 16.

The worst months for overcrowding in 2019 were November (12,055), October (11,452), and September (10,641).

The worst-hit hospitals in 2019 included:

- University Hospital Limerick - 13,941;
- Cork University Hospital - 11,066;
- University Hospital Galway - 7,993;
- South Tipperary General Hospital - 6,942;
- University Hospital Waterford - 6,313.

The INMO said under-staffing and a lack of capacity were the key drivers of overcrowding in Irish hospitals.

According to INMO general secretary Phil Ní Sheaghdha, there are 411 fewer inpatient beds in hospitals today than a decade ago, despite a larger, older population.

"Things are getting worse, not better," she said.

"These figures should be failing, but we're going the wrong direction. 2019 saw thousands more patients without proper beds - often at one of the most vulnerable points in their lives.

"Overcrowding used to be a winter problem. Now it's an all-year problem, which gets worse in winter.

"The most frustrating part is that we know how to solve this problem: increase staffing and bed capacity; expand community care; and get going with the Sláintecare reforms."

She added that changes would not be made without sufficient investment and an end to the recruitment ban.

The figures come as Health Minister Simon Harris urged people with suspected flu symptoms to avoid going to their GP or attending hospital unless absolutely necessary.

INMO general secretary Phil Ní Sheaghdha

He made the plea as the latest figures from the HSE said half of the 187 patients on trolleys in A&E wards today are suffering from the flu, which has claimed 19 lives so far this season.

Although health officials believe the number of flu cases is already higher now than the peak of 53 per 100,000 population which occurred at the height of flu season last year, Mr Harris said we were not out of the woods yet.

"We feel the flu may have peaked, but we still have another five weeks of the flu season left," he said.

In response to the INMO's end-of-year analysis, the HSE partially credited the spike in hospital admissions to the impact of the current flu season.

"The attendances at emergency departments (EDs) are up 7pc in December 2019 compared to the same period last year," a spokesperson said.

"In the week running up to Christmas Eve, the ED attendances were up by 14.2pc on the same week last year, with attendances by persons over 75 up by 24.9pc on the same week last year.

"The health system is working hard to cope with the increased demand for services and GPs, community services and hospital staff are dealing with very significant surge in workloads."
